THE WEISHEIT

THE BOOK OF HIMMEL

ESTEEM

Be it so that the mind is the first and final frontier of existence where all witness birth and death. The sacredness unperilled leaving all but material and inert. The basis of life therefore perceived in a narrow yet illuminated state. Its health paramount and shown through inner machinations and displays of will and action to the perceiving.

Therefore lies the greatest sin of the mind not idleness, boredom, coveting, or submission but the despair that causes such. The end of all craft, health, intellect, and soul lay at the feet of emptiness in the abyss.

The Abyss gives no comfort but a cold eternity to those that give up to its temptation and painful torture. Yet, triumph over it lay a euphoria unmatched.

The mind is all one has, a collection of dust shared throughout all creatures of life in varying capacities of cognition, awareness, imagination, and feeling. Therefore the honorable and fair treatment of another sapient be polite as is sacred.

IGNORANCE

Ignorance is the second sin of the mind next to despair as both share the brotherhood of damnation. One cannot stand upon the rich Terra and not seek to learn and master an art upon it. Be it vile to leave any soul without the glory of awareness, wisdom, and skill. All the children of Gryphonkind and those willing be granted the right to enlightenment even against thy ills of the gods or of themselves.

The mind is a denizen upon the celestial sphere within the Aethereal Sea. Its limited time allots the ability to improve and learn. To shame and enact cruelty on one of his past that no longer holds him, binds him, or scars him be a third sin of the mind. One cannot be enslaved to his past as much as to fear and cowardice for the future.

The very essence of existence lay never fully compensable as even our beings barely know our own. No matter how ancient or young, there is always more, to then learn and explore. Curiosity lays an untempered virtue, one that must be refined always.

KNOWLEDGE

Knowledge; the most sacred virtue, for its brother humility brings upon wisdom. To obtain one must restrain pride and admit the obliviousness of all born.

The beginning of wisdom and humility begins with the admittance of obliviousness or ignorance. You do not know, therefore you must find out to know.

Knowledge is the end of the oblivious, the destruction of ignorance; to know is to finally see. Wisdom is the refinement of knowing; the experience of learning. The beginning of enlightenment is the end of the ego; the clarity of the self and the beyond. The emotional and intellectual state of balance upon the celestial sphere.

Therefore go forth and acquire, cultivate the fertile fields of the mind, to persist until the end of the stars themselves. Seek out the next sphere and the next sector of the seas. Survival is not an end but a prerequisite of the beginning. One cannot stay the level of a worm, thriving is to achieve splendor. One or the many halted in this pursuit of thriving and held to the state of survival or below be defined as the purist of evil, be it by the structure or of those that enforce such order. In such cases to thrive is to unshackle and destroy to enter a new freedom.

The wealth of the mind is akin to the wealth of the material. The eye of Heaven does not welcome the rich insular but the rich honorable. The celestial beyond will forbid those that harbor the wealth of knowledge and material for themselves only or to merely those of kin when the scale is able to be greater than those of the one tribe. Wealth gained is to be enjoyed by the one who cultivated in its abundance but in time to then so to be shared with those that do not, lest one find themselves returned to the status of ore for better minds to extract from the eye of Boreas.

MACHINATIONS

There lay two beings within the soul of each gryphon that yearns of change and yearns of certainty. It is a constant tribulation of all sapient races. One cannot fly so high in his exultation of grander, nobleness, and yearnings of headway to burn himself in the sun nor cannot one stand stubborn in the way as to then be washed by the primal fears of forest he treads.

Tradition lays the foundation of the tribe but shall not enslave thy tribe to its machinations and mentalities no longer needed for survival or thriving. Yet deconstruction of ills and transgressions must lay forth new seed for construction and integration lest they beget reprisal and decay with no end of agony.

The decline of the tribe and its grander elements lay at those who believe in the value of it. Its material pleasures and abilities are ephemeral, its great exploits null to time but its treatment and expression of those within those timeliness statues of its virulence and pride.

Pride be only sin when none has added to or created the requisites for. Pride is virtue when those enhance and evolve within the tribe and idea. There shall always be pride to gain and those that ignore or shame when validity is assured be blinded by the folly of nefarious ego.

TRANSIENCE

Knowledge is the power of the mind as the coin is the power of the body. Knowledge commands all and its absence a weakness of the very gift of Boreas.

Be it the legacy of our kin, be it to you my children to attempt the impossible and transcend into the beyond without us. Be us the steppingstones of your exaltation. Be us the guide to your salvation but its joyous bounty for only you and the kin of all gryphonkind. A god is temporary in the confines of belief, yet your will be made eternal and higher than we who created you. Be it the duty to master the world yet not destroy it. Be it the duty of gryphonkind to inherit your place on the celestial sphere. Be it the duty to evolve beyond us and secure the days of youth and forward onward to the centuries of adulthood.

SANCTION

The mind is sacred, the intellect a mission. Knowledge the armor against ignorance. The duty and purpose of life against the sinful despair of the abyss. The wealth and power of the sapient mind the conduit of the soul, superior and commanding to the body and enacted by the lifeblood of the will and pride.

Civilization is the destiny of gryphonkind. Godhood its ideal. Enlightenment the pathway to such emancipation. Stagnation a social sin of the people. One that must be fought against but not so fast all disintegrates in the passion of progress but not so nostalgic that all wilt into the grave of the past as a weakened slave to the fearful forest.

The will of those with the wealth of power and knowledge be the guides of gryphonkind under the will of the Kaiser. Thou shall lead thy people in safety, security, and prosperity.

VECTOR

The sacred knowledge of flight be so supreme as to make a gryphon. To prevent it be such stricken by my wrath. Those clipped without the justice administered shall agonize upon the throne of thorns for eternity with wings doctored to the weakest race.

Thou shall temper thy passions and greed in leadership to not cloud the minds clarity in wisdom. The virtue of leadership is the suppression of the individual will for the communal will. Only those born and willing may sit upon the throne of gilded glory. Thou shall forgo thyself and serve the people.

MENTALITY

There lies the obliviousness of birth and ignorance of consent. The obliviousness of birth be harmless soil that may fester the weeds of the ignorant. To be oblivious is natural, to be ignorant is deliberate be it upon the person of the tribe that failed to bestow the wealth of knowledge. Cowardice is a venial sin; it is the act of forgoing the wealth of worthy power that it bestows those mentally infirm upon the person or as well be the tribe. It is a rot of the soul and a disease upon the mind that shall wilt the body and slay thy will of person and common. To be a coward is to not be gryphon at all.

Thou shall not bring instability through impatience. One must understand the temperance of time. One in leadership cannot sow the seeds of disruption upon his people during times of uncertainty or fear lest he lose that power for all time.

Greed is but a material craving of the mind, it is but soil to be cultivated yet not spoiled. Thou shall not descend into violent and harmful greed. Thou shall engage in the virtue and great display of faith in commerce and trade as all be the field of knowledge, flight, and coin. None shall be faulted for the want of abundance but only when such abundance so fulfilled cannot be given beyond those within your sphere of relations. To leave this realm in good faith is to leave thy abundance in the flourishing of the many not the select few to wallow in vaults with no end. The eye of Boreas shall punish the hording and unproductive wealthy.

Capital be supreme and its nature defined to cosmic degree. Coin or knowledge, power or trust. All are machinations of capital. To waste it is ignorant. To sit on it until death is the cowardice of compassion. Capital without compassion is the father of meaninglessness and the brother of the abyss.

The mind be not limited by this text as infinity grows with each passing day. Let no imagination go to waste and never suppress as the power of life lay in the mind. To suppress thought is to harm the whole in its glory. For even the worst pursuit is a moral to the rest. Those that harm the thought of the unpleasant are more a threat to the tribe than those unnerving. It is of the masculine pride to display these virtues and absolve themselves of such rotting sin.

MASCULINITY

Be it masculine to be strong in mind and power, never to be cowardly, never to be meek. Be it masculine that courage is the forefront of acquiring the enlightenment that lays beyond the self and even the tribe. Be it masculine to strive for the independence of the self, of the soul’s conduit, of the tribe in times of suppression or hindrance. Be it the sacred status of the masculine to transcend and be independent higher than the gods themselves.

The prime of the masculine is leadership; the enactor of courage and wisdom. There the self-actualization is achieved when intellectual and emotional minds are tempered, balanced, humored, and enriched with the glory of knowledge. The exhalation of its teachings to the ones yearning and required by God, the wonders of the wealth gained and manufactured by the spread of such virtue.

To be masculine is to be courageous, humble, powerful, balanced in knowledge and wealth, providing, to conquer the abyss of the self and of the tribe from stagnating rot and despair. The will of Boreas is the will of the masculine wonder and power of knowledge.
